

Project Update: September 2017

Project activities have so far been very productive, yielding preliminary results which look extremely interesting. My respondents from the Hunting Association were very enthusiastic in taking part in the first workshop, and had a lot of questions about AMWC's work. Many participants were eager to demonstrate their knowledge about local wildlife, and I identified 10 key individuals who were interested in receiving training to assist AMWC in our conservation activities.

I have also conducted semi-structured interviews with 10 members of the Hunting Association so far. These interviews were an excellent opportunity to build on existing working relationships with my respondents, and my initial analysis of the transcribed files reveals some very useful insights into motivations for hunting and for pro-conservation behaviour among the respondents. I am looking forward to continuing to work with members of the Hunting Association for my remaining workshops, and to work further on interview analysis to elucidate the content.
